I agree with this statement. For one thing, in Japan, the percentage of women in key positions in the government and major corporations is very low compared with that of other developed countries, which means that sexism still exists right here in Japan. I think we will just have to pass a law regarding the quota system so that we can improve this sad situation. For another, if a certain number of women were promoted to key positions, they might be able to manage better the government and big companies from their own points of view. This is exactly what is called “diversity” and I think it important to build an ideal society where both men and women could be treated in a fairer way. For the above reasons, I think Japan should adopt the quota system.
